

Natali Ortega

Eternal Summer

That summer seemed to last forever, The days passed and the heat became worse to the point where it was impossible to leave the houses because if you did you would be burned alive by the sun.

Summer will be eternal, the other seasons will not come, now there will only be heat, Visitors began to appear and with them the end of the world was coming. The visitors had once been people like us but after much exposure to the sun they became what they were now.

MONSTERS

Rules and laws no longer existed. If you wanted to help people, you had to give them a roof over their heads so they wouldn't get burned by the sun. You had to be careful, as they could be visitors looking to kill you and your refugees.

People had begun to go out at night trying to continue with their normal lives but that was clearly impossible. Drunks who fell unconscious were burned, teenagers who went out were killed by visitors, terror flooded the cities, and people began to move to small towns and abandoned the cities.

Money no longer mattered since everyone would end up in the same place.....

DEAD

Night had fallen, the people you had sheltered the night before were sleeping or waiting. You went to get some water when you heard someone knocking on the door. Another person looking to escape the sun.

You looked through the peephole in the door and said, "What do you want?"